So far I've seen people shot in the head and eye with rubber bullets, directly and not from a ricochet or bounce, tear gas canisters shot directly at people from point blank range, and children being maced and tear gassed

Why aren't more cops being shot? Why aren't people actually fighting back? You want cops to stop doing this shit, but you roll over immediately and let them. The cops won't use a peaceful protest to get us to stop doing something they don't like, they'll tear gas, mace, and shoot you instead. Time for us to do the same. If you're a cop and don't like that I suggest you find a new profession, one where you don't get to escalate force because you felt like it, because I don't fucking care

I've thought about going out in some of my hockey gear but fear the message it might send/make me a target.
But for real I'm sure they would love for someone to shoot at them so that they'd be justified in using more lethal force

Jake Relapse the only thing keeping the police in power and the rest of us under their thumb is the lack of organization in us. They use lethal force, that's running the risk of a lot more people than them using that same force back.

We won't ask the national government for military help... but we'll sure as fuck use the national guard that's already here. Fuck you I hope you get a flat tire and fall out of your wheelchair and no ones there to help you back up.
